

Venkatanarayana Motkuri, PhD, is a post-graduate in Economics and Education and holds M.Phil and Ph.D. in economics (PhD is from JNU, New Delhi through CDS, Trivandrum). He has diverse research experience of working for national (such as CESS, NIRDPR, IHD, CII, Sigma Consulting and others) as well as international organizations (The World Bank, DFID, Oxford University) for different research studies/projects. Along with two edited volumes to his credit, he has more than thirty publications in reputed national and international journals and chapters in edited volumes. The latest edited volume is Adivasis in India (2016), published by Bloomsbury India. His research work is published in journals such as Agricultural Systems (Elsevier), Water Conservancy, EPW, Journal of Educational Planning and Administration, Millennial Asia, IASSI Quarterly, Indian Economic Journal, and Indian Journal of Human Development. He has published research papers on adult literacy, educational deprivation of children, labour and employment including that of women and youth, workforce in healthcare sector, and on pharmaceutical industry and its regulations. His areas of interests are: Economics of Education, along with the domain of Human Development focusing on education, health, human and social capital. Employment/labour, poverty and inequality, agriculture and climate change, regional disparities, development of marginalized and poor, social policy and affirmative action are other research areas.